

Prior to the Telephone Consumer Protection Act, our home was besieged by telemarketer after telemarketer interrupting family dinners and our children's homework. Ignoring the calls proved to no avail as they would continue to call until they were able to speak to someone. Since the adoption of the Act, calls have decreased nearly 100% and we have been able to enjoy uninterrupted dinner conversations, and are no longer pestered by aggressive telemarketers. Please do not change this law. Ed Almeida
